In 1919, Baden-Powell started a formal system for leader training at Gilwell Park, near London. Those who completed the course were awarded the 'Wood Badge'. This was not a cloth badge, but a pair of beads from the ceremonial necklace of the Zulu chief, Dinizulu.

Although the beads from that original necklace are no longer used, leaders throughout the world still continue the tradition of the Wood Badge. Leaders are also enrolled as members of the 1st Gilwell Park Scout Group and wear the distinctive scarf and woggle.
